Michael Fogle Row (125, 127, 129, and 131 Water Street)

Built around 1898

Frederick, Frederick County, Maryland

Private dwellings

Brief Description

These four row brick houses, 125, 127, 129, and 131 Water Street, were built around 1898. In its entirety, the two-story, eight-bay, shed-roofed row is built of seven-course-American-bond brick. Although all of the dwellings have the same width, the house at the south end, 131 Water Street, is the largest of the units, extending deep into its long, narrow lot. Unlike most of the dwellings in the neighborhood, these row houses are set back slightly from the street and have small front yards. All of the buildings in the row include ornamental interior and exterior architectural details, such as segmentally-arched brick lintels and an impressive cornice. The interior that was examined in 125 Water Street revealed an ornamental false fireplace on an interior partition wall. These embellishments indicate the efforts of the builder to endow these modest dwellings with elements of fashion and refinement.

Summary Statement of Significance

The Michael Fogle Row is a contributing building in the Frederick Historic District. It was built on lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of Mary A. Welty's Addition to Frederick, Maryland, a small subdivision that was developed in the 1890s on the south side of the railroad tracks. The four lots were among the larger lots in the subdivision. Michael Fogle built the four dwellings around 1898 and occupied the large end unit with his family, maintaining the other units as rental properties. Fogle's descendants continue to reside in the row and in other dwellings in the neighborhood.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Contributing Resource Count: 3 buildings

These four row houses, 125, 127, 129, and 131 Water Street, were built around 1898 by Michael Fogle. Although all of the dwellings have the same width, the house at the south end, 131 Water Street, is the largest of the units, extending deep into its long, narrow lot. It was also the only unit with outbuildings, which included storage sheds and a chicken coop. Fogle occupied this dwelling with his family and maintained the others as rental properties. Unlike most of the dwellings in the neighborhood, these row houses are set back slightly from the street and have small front yards. All of the buildings in the row include ornamental interior and exterior architectural details, such as segmentally-arched brick lintels and an impressive cornice. The one interior that was examined in 125 Water Street revealed an ornamental false fireplace on an interior partition wall. These embellishments indicate the efforts of the builder to endow these modest dwellings with elements of fashion and refinement.

In its entirety, the two-story, eight-bay, shed-roofed row is built of seven-course-American-bond brick. Each of the units is three rooms deep. Although 131 Water Street was built in this basic configuration, its rear rooms are contained in a two-story back building, which is a common feature in both the immediate neighborhood and throughout Frederick. In the other three units, 125, 127, and 129 Water Street, the third room is contained in a one-story rear wing. The structure rests on a low limestone foundation. On the front east elevation, the foundation is pierced with centered openings in each unit containing cellar windows. Each of these windows has a flat wood lintel topped by a brick header course. The windows and doors on the front elevation are topped by a two-course, segmental brick arch. The front windows are all two-over-two double sash with wood sills. The front doors, in the first, fourth, fifth, and eighth bays, are topped by recessed, two-light transoms. The wide wood frieze below the cornice is stacked and is supported by six ornate brackets, delineating the width of each unit. The shed roof is covered with standing-seam metal. The west rear of the row is characterized by the multiple planes of a variety of rear wings and additions added to the individual units.

While the row was constructed as a uniform whole, the individual units display minor variations, most of which result from later additions and alterations.

On 125 Water Street at the north end of the row, the front door is a three-light, three-panel replacement, and its transom has been covered with a storm window. Likewise, the door and windows have been covered with a storm door and windows. The brick is painted an off-white, and the cornice, frieze, cornice brackets, and the door and window trim are painted maroon. The front yard is poured-concrete and is surrounded by a chain-link fence. Its north elevation, facing onto an alley, has no openings, but some of the brick work has been repaired.

Its west rear elevation features several later additions, all with shed-roofs covered with standing-seam metal. The first addition is a one-story, one-bay, kitchen, built of seven-course-American-bond brick. This addition was added to the west elevation of the original one-story rear kitchen. A single window on its west elevation is one-over-one double sash with a wood lintel and a brick sill.

A one-story, shed-roofed, frame addition was added above the original kitchen and side porch, making a two-story rear wing. The walls of this addition are clad with vinyl. The two windows on the west elevation are a four-over-four double sash and a small one-over-one double sash. This addition may have originally housed a sleeping porch.

A third one-story, shed-roofed frame addition was made to the south elevation of the kitchen addition, flush with the west end of the enclosed first-floor porch. This is a storage area, accessed on the interior from the kitchen addition. It is clad with vinyl siding, and has a twelve-light, one-panel door with a storm door opening onto the rear yard.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The four brick dwellings, 125, 127, 129, and 131 Water Street, were built around 1898 by Michael Fogle on lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of Mary A. Welty's Addition to Frederick, Maryland. These lots faced southward onto South Street. Conversely, four dwellings were built to face eastward onto Water Street. Because the four houses had frontages of only 16 feet, all four of them covered a little more than half of the total available Water Street frontage. The remaining land between the house at the south end of the row and South Street was never developed with buildings and now serves as a large garden.

Welty's Addition was developed in the last decade of the nineteenth century on an undeveloped tract of land in the eastern end of the city, south of the B&O Railroad tracks. In 1889 the heirs of tanner George K. Birely transferred 3 acres, 3 roods and 16 perches of land to Mary A. and Horace G. Welty. Although Horace Welty sold the property to his father, he and John S. Ramsburg surveyed the tract and divided it into twenty lots, as illustrated in a May 23, 1891 plat recorded in the land records of Frederick County. After the plat was recorded, Joseph Welty sold the subdivided tract to Horace Welty's wife, Mary A. Welty for $1 and "natural love and affection.

Lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 were among the larger lots in the subdivision, measuring 130-feet deep and having thirty-foot frontages on South Street. An exception was Lot 1, which was wedge-shaped and had a larger South Street frontage. According to Mary Jane Cregger, current owner and occupant of 125 Water Street, her grandfather, Michael Fogle, built the four dwellings in the 1890s. Although the buildings were not shown on the 1897 Sanborn Fire Insurance Map of Frederick, in 1900 the census taker enumerated four households in the four houses.

The addresses given in the census, 41 (125 Water Street) though 47 (131 Water Street) Water Street, were also the addresses shown for the four dwellings as they appeared in the 1904 Sanborn Map. According to the map, each dwelling was two-stories in height with a one-story rear wing and one-story side porch adjoining the wing. The last house on the row, 131 Water Street, was an exception. It had a two-story rear wing with a two-story porch, as well as a one-story wing at the rear. At the rear of the lot it also had a two-story barn or carriage house with an attached one-story outbuilding.

This largest house, with the large open lot to the south was occupied by the owners and builder of the row. In this dwelling, the census listed Michael Fogle, a 49-year-old carpenter, as the head of household. He and his wife Elizabeth had one son, 5-year-old Clarence, as well as 10-year-old Ira, a son from Michael Fogle's previous marriage. The remaining houses in the row were occupied by tenants who presumably rented from the Fogles. Next door to the Fogles, 129 Water Street was occupied by Joseph King, a 49-year-old day laborer, and his 52-year-old wife, Anne E. who was a native of Pennsylvania. Of nine children to whom she had given birth, only five survived, all of whom resided in the house. The eldest, Harry J., was 29 and worked as a day laborer. Lillian, who was 21, and Bessie, who was 16, both served as family cooks. Charles W. at 10-years of age attended school, and 4-year-old George was at home.

Next door, 127 Water Street is painted blue, and its two-course brick segmental arches, the wood window and door trim, and the cornice and frieze are painted white. It retains its original two-light transom above a replacement single-light, three-panel door. The sodded front yard is fenced with chain-link on either side and with a white picket fence across the front.

The upper story of its original west rear elevation is visible above several first-story additions. The second story window is two-over-two double-hung sash covered with a storm window. A one-story, two-bay, shed-roofed frame addition was added to the rear of the original kitchen and shares its north wall with the storage addition on 125 Water Street. This addition has a six-over-six double-sash window and a new door, both of which are covered with a storm door and window. The addition is clad in composite siding, and its roof is covered with standing-seam metal. What appears to be a bathroom has been added to the second story over the original kitchen. This addition is clad brick-tex and has a standing-seam metal roof. The window on its west elevation is one-over-one double sash and has an awning.

The front elevation of 129 Water Street is painted grey. It has a nine-panel front door, and its transom is visible through a storm window. The yard is grass with a brick path to the stoop at the door. Its west rear elevation appears to retain its original configuration. The second-story windows are two-over-two double sash and have plain wood sills and lintels. The original one-story kitchen has a standing-seam-metal shed roof that extends to the west to create a side porch. This extended roof covers a door on the west elevation of the two-story portion of the unit. Near the back of the kitchen is a small, prefabricated, gable-roofed, metal storage shed that is a non-contributing outbuilding.

At the end of the row, 131 Water Street is the only unit with a two-story brick back building. The entire building is painted red and has a grassy front yard and a front stoop with a wood rail. A large vegetable garden fills the area between the house and South Street. Facing onto the garden, the south side elevation of the original portion of the unit has three asymmetrically placed windows. The first story window and one of the second-story windows are six-over-six double sash with plain wood sills and lintels. The forward positioned second-story window has a segmental brick arch matching those on the east front. A two-story, shed-roofed brick addition was made to the west elevation of the original portion of the unit. The addition is painted red to match the rest of the building, and its roof is covered with standing-seam metal. A centrally placed, two-story angled frame bay projects from the south elevation of the addition. The cornice and frieze of the two-story bay are similar to those on the east elevation. The three windows in the bay are two-over-two double sash with plain wood sills and lintels. A glazed door on the southwest elevation of the bay opens into the side yard.

The west elevation of the original portion of the unit is obscured by the two-story addition. Sanborn maps indicate that it originally had a two-story porch on its north elevation. This porch appears to have been enclosed with a concrete-block addition that projects about two feet north from the back building. Within the narrow, west wall of this projection is a narrow paneled door covered by a wood awning. A three-light fixed window fits into the narrow space on the second story above. The north side elevation of this projecting concrete-block enclosure has a six-over-six sash window on the first floor and a six-pane casement and a single-light fixed window on its second floor. The north and west elevations of the two-story addition have two-over-two wood-sash windows that match the others on the rear brick addition.

The shed-roofed frame storage shed and a chicken coop at the rear of 131 Water Street are contributing outbuildings. The shed-roofed frame storage building perpendicular to the chicken coop is a non-contributing outbuilding.

Access was permitted into the first floor of 125 Water Street, which was measured and photographed.

Its east front room serves as the formal parlor and is accessed by the front door on its east wall. Its walls and ceiling are plaster, and its floors have been covered with linoleum. The window and door surrounds, as well as the baseboards, are wide and flat rather than molded, and appear to be replacements. On the south wall is a false fireplace with a wood mantelpiece with a molded frieze. The mantle shelf is supported on rectangular blocks with molded cornices. The blocks rest atop pilasters that flank the blocked fireplace opening. On the west wall of the room, the door to the middle room has been enlarged.

The middle room is the informal parlor. The floor and moldings in this room match those in the formal parlor, but the plaster walls have been papered. The false fireplace on the east, interior partition wall is smaller and less ornate than that in the formal parlor. Plain pilasters support a plain panel frieze flanked by rectangular blocks. The blocks are embellished with corner blocks and topped by a plain mantle shelf. An original window that opened onto a side porch has been removed, and its opening has been made into a recessed book case. A boxed, straight-run staircase along the north wall leads to the second floor and the cellar. The stair to the cellar is enclosed with a four-panel door on the east side of the staircase. A four-panel door on the west end of the south wall of the staircase accesses the stairs to the second floor.

To the rear of the middle room is the a third room that originally served as the kitchen. In the northeast corner of the room is an additional door to the staircase leading to the second floor. The kitchen has the same wall and floor treatments and moldings as the formal parlor. A window on its south wall, which originally opened onto the side porch, was removed, and its opening was made into a recessed book case. The doorway to the side porch on the south wall now opens into the laundry room. The original side porch was used as a summer kitchen, but has been enclosed to form a laundry room. A small area at its west end has been enclosed as a bathroom.

The one-story kitchen addition on the rear is accessed by a door in the west wall of the original kitchen. A door on the south wall of this addition leads out to a one-story storage room addition.

Section number 8 Page 1

Two brothers, Scott and Claude Rauch, resided in 127 Water Street with their families. The brother were both in their early twenties and worked as day laborers. Both had wives, Mary and Nettie, respectively, and infants. Their 57-year-old mother, Margaret F., who lived with them had given birth to eleven children, but only eight were still living. At the end to the row, day laborer Leslie Stine resided in 125 Water Street with his wife Mary, and their two infant children.

By 1910, Michael Fogle's household had increased in size with the addition of three boarders. Will Kneffs, who was 25, worked as brick maker as did James Wilder, who was 70. The third boarder, 23-year-old Joseph Bauman, was a mill turner at the hosiery factory. Fogle's son, Albert, was 20-years old and worked as a well driller, while Clarence, at 15, attended school.

The 1910 census did not list any occupants on 129 Water Street, but a 1906 directory lists Jacob Hahn as its occupant. Next door, 127 Water Street was occupied by William Engle, a car inspector at the B&O Railroad, and his wife, Muriel. Both were in their thirties and had a 6-year-old son, Melvin.

Another young family occupied 125 Water Street, Stephen and Nellie Hahn, who were in their twenties. They had three young daughters, Maud, Agnes, and Catherine, and Stephen Hahn's 50-year-old widowed aunt, Sophia Ford also lived in the house. Stephen Hahn had a job as a brush maker at the nearby brush factory. Stephen Hahn had grown up in the neighborhood and resided at the time of the 1900 census at 30 Water Street with his mother Mary Hahn, who had never married, and her sister Sophia Ford. Both Mary and Sophia had lived in the neighborhood since the 1880s when they lived with their brother Jacob Hahn on B&O Avenue.

By the 1920s, the Hahns were the only family remaining in the row. Stephen Hahn's position at the brush factory had changed from a brush maker to a machinist, and he and his wife had had five more children, including three sons and another daughter. Including his aunt, Sophia Ford, there were a total of eleven occupants of the house. Harry Jones and his wife Lulu had moved into 127 Water Street, where they lived with their six children who ranged in age from one to twelve. Harry Jones worked as a stable manager at the brick works, and he and his wife were in their thirties.

The Fogles appear to have moved out of 131 Water Street, which was rented in 1920 by they Stine family, which had rented 125 Water Street in 1900. By 1920, Leslie Stine worked as a salesman, and he and his wife had eight children living at home, ranging in age from 10 months to 17. Their two eldest sons, 17-year-old Grayson and 16-year-old Michael were both laborers at the canning factory.

Although the Fogles were no longer residing in 131 Water Street, They appear to have kept at least one unit in the row in the family. Although Michael Fogle's son, Clarence, with his wife Alice Louise and daughter, Elizabeth bought 112 Water Street in 1925. Clarence Fogle was listed as the head of household in 127 Water Street in the city directory of 1928-29. By 1935, the Creggers had moved to their house at 112 Water Street, but moved back into the row, to 125 Water Street, in the 1940s. By that time, their household included a total of eight people. Clarence Fogle died in the late 1940s, but his wife remained in 125 Water Street through the following decade, sharing the house with Harry Fogle, who was a salesman. By 1960, Alice Louise Fogle's son-in-law, Leonard Cregger was the head of the household at 125 Water Street, and Alice had moved into the smaller dwelling across the street at 112 Water Street. Alice Louise Fogle died in 1995, but her daughter, Mary Jane Cregger, continues to reside in 125 Water Street with her daughter Jean Hildebrand's family.

Next door, 127 Water Street was occupied from the 1930s until the 1950s by Howard Tyeryar and his wife Mary. Their large household included ten people in 1940. In 1950, Howard Tyeryar was listed in the city directory as a watchman at Francis Scott Key Hotel, and two other members of his household, Frederick and Rudolph Tyeryar, were both described as laborers.

The dwelling at 129 Water Street, which appears to have served mainly as a rental property, was occupied by a succession of renters including A.F. Houff, Wilbur Rhinehart, and his household of nine people, Thomas and Fannie McCabe, Thomas Colliflower, and Myrtle Beal.

By the late 1920s, the largest house in the row, 131 Water Street, was occupied by Howard I. Harris. Harris owned the dwelling and resided in it until the late 1950s when it was purchased by John McGinnis, who was listed in the 1960 directory as a carpenter. The current owners of 131 and well as 129 Water Street both have the surname McGinnis
